WARPATH

THE country had once been Indian country. For a hundred miles north and two hundred miles to east and west, the whole vast land had belonged to the Miute Indians, once a fierce and warlike tribe. For two decades they had sat astride the buffalo trails, living in their small, temporary villages on the wide, grassy plains, moving here and there as the big game moved, much as they had for many thousands of years before.

Then the white man came. The Miute Indians were brave The white man offered money in exchange for lands. For awhile, the Miutes held out because warlike chiefs counselled resistance and conflict. There were, in fact, at least a dozen clashes between the whites and the Miutes before each side became thoroughly convinced that both sides were getting nowhere by flying at each other. Then a final council of whites and Miutes around a campfire was held. The pipe of peace was passed about, and, after much palaver a settlement was reached. The Miutes were to have a reservation vast enough in extent to support their tribes. For their part, the whites paid for open roads further West.

Once this was done, settlers poured in, some of them stopping off at fertile spots and founding towns. The largest of these became Bardsboro.

Bardsboro touched the Miute reservation at only two points. In the thirty years of its existence, there had been no trouble between the Indians and the whites. Not, in fact, until one morning during a hot July when the annual Indian Dance festival had been going on in all the villages of the Miute nation for several days.

Laird Rance, owner of the big Triple R spread, came out at dawn on a Thursday to see to the shoeing of his favorite horse. He watched the waddy at the forge heat up the shoes, but left for a stroll before they were tempered, quenched and hammered fast. He went out onto the small hill that rose like a loaf of bread at the west end of the ranchyard. There were trees planted here and there, and Rance enjoyed the cool rustling of the morning wind through their creaking boughs. He had walked out from the forge empty-handed.

He came back carrying an Indian war arrow . . . a Miute arrow. He had seen it sticking in one of the trees like a twigless branch. Two days before he had seen another just like it lying on the ground. This he had picked up and put away casually as a possibly historical find. But the arrow that had stuck into the tree was somewhat different. Around its head were some brightly colored feathers on a length of thong; and it was piercing, by its sharp iron arrow-head a bit of bark on which was inscribed a sign well known in that region; the Miute Indian sign of war.

Rance stood outside the forge for a moment, looking at the arrow. Then he went into the small toolshed to one side, and got the other arrow. He wrapped both arrows in paper, got his horse from the forge and rode into Bardsboro to see Sheriff Mark Salter.

Salter greeted him cordially at his office.

"Long time no see, Laird," he commented.

"Been busy, Mark," the rancher said. He laid the bundle on the sheriff's desk and unwrapped it; he plucked out the arrows and laid them before Salter.

Mark Salter peered at them, his eyes narrowing.

"Where did you get them?" he asked.

Laird Rance explained.

For a moment, Salter was silent. Then he opened the bottom drawer of his desk and took out another arrow. Like the second one Rance had found, it transfixed a bit of bark, and on the bark was inscribed the Miute sign of war.

"Jud Miller found that last night," Salter said. "Same story as yours . . . found it in his ranchyard, way out back."

Rance sighed.

"I figured something was up," he said. "Well, that war sign on both the pieces of bark is interesting enough, even without the arrows." He shrugged. "I can't figure it. You think it has something to do with the Injun dances on the reservation?"

"What makes you think that?"

"Well, Injuns are funny folks," Rance replied. "They usually hold dances before going on the warpath, don't they?"

Salter smiled.

Ever think of the big money you could earn as an Auto Mechanic?

You can't appreciate your opportunities for success in the auto-repair field unless you weigh a few facts. Did you know that 68 million cars and trucks are now on the road? That 44 million of these are in the heavy-repair class? That America is short 100,000 mechanics? That only 10 percent of the required number to fill waiting jobs are in training? That there is enough work for 25,000 more automotive repair shops?

Now is the time to train for a better job, high pay, steady work! "The earning power of a qualified mechanic is comparable to that of a college graduate," a famous "mechanics" magazine reports. Train at home in spare time for a bright future as an auto mechanic. The coupon brings free information. Be sure to mail it today!

So practical many students earn cash in spare time

CTI training is practical. You are encouraged to gain skill as you acquire knowledge. Thanks to this thoughtful feature, many students are able to repair autos and trucks soon after enrolling. They work evenings and week-ends; on their own or in neighborhood shops. The profits help pay tuition and buy extra equipment. The experience develops confidence as it perfects skill. Remember: CTI instruction is easy to understand, well illustrated and to the point.

Go in business for yourself

If you like the independence that a business of your own brings, the auto field offers a welcome hand. You can start right in your own back yard, as many students have done. Your tools and tune-up kit, which CTI sends as part of your training, are all you need at first. Some of our shop-owner graduates have never worked for anyone else as mechanics.

Top income for specialists

Surveys show that specialists earn more money than all-around mechanics. Tune-up, automatic transmission and electric specialists are much in demand, and highly paid. It's easier, and requires less investment, to open a shop that concentrates on one phase of repair. In addition to full training on all repair subjects, CTI also sends you instruction on Diesel Mechanics or Body and Fender Rebuilding, at no extra cost. Get total training!

What do CTI students say?

Letters from students prove value of CTI training. Read these unsolicited testimonials: "Am now a senior auto mechanic. Made $800 during training."—Ronald Wharton, Md. "Started a small business in my garage. Now have two part-time helpers."—John Reed, Cal. "Am proud I finished course. Have two job offers."—Barden Vance, Ind. "Am working as a mechanic and earn twice what I used to. Made $25 a week as I trained."—Jerome Slowik, Ill. "Have three job offers. Made $170 as a student."—Willie Cooper, Fla. "Have started my own tune-up and brake shop. Am earning about $50 a week more than before."—G. Gunts, Cal.

Get facts now—Decide later

A career as an auto mechanic sounds great, doesn't it? Why not get complete information on your opportunities? Facts are free. Mail coupon!

You learn by practicing with tools and tune-up kit

To help you acquire practical experience as you train, CTI sends (and shows you how to use) an engine tune-up kit and a set of mechanic's tools, including a socket set. Precision instruments include a compression tester; vacuum gauge and fuel pump tester; ignition timing light; and portable steel case. Instruments help you locate engine troubles quickly. Tools speed your training, inspire confidence, and let you earn spare-time profits. No extra charge for CTI professional-quality kits. (Tune-up kit is a CTI "first.")

The auto repair business is the greatest of the service fields. It employs more mechanics than any other—needs more men to fill good jobs. Send for free information, and prove to yourself that opportunities are better. Fill out coupon, mail today!

"They used to," he admitted. "But you're wrong when you think Injuns are just funny folk. They have their customs like anybody else. Those dances over in the reservation are just customs."

Rance's eyes narrowed.

"There's still the arrows," he said. "And they've been found on two spreads, mine and Jud Miller's. The first arrow I thought nothing of, except that it might be a relic. But the second one, and now this third one of Jud's . . ." He paused, significantly. "You don't fire arrows around just for fun . . . not arrows with a war symbol on them."

"I hardly think the Miutes are going on the warpath," the sheriff said, skeptically. "They've been at peace for quite a long time, now, and they wouldn't stand much of a chance against Winchesters. Besides, what reasons would they have?"

Rance shook his head. "Hard to figure," he said, dubiously. "But it might be resentment at some fancied or real slight in the past. And you know how fond the Injuns are of secret societies. Maybe some secret society has gotten together and planned going on the warpath. I admit any Injun war that broke out wouldn't last long . . . but it could be very damaging in the meantime."

Sheriff Salter considered this for a moment.

"Maybe you're right, maybe you're wrong. I'm inclined to think you're wrong," he said. "Besides, this is the Injun festival season, and I think it would be bad policy to interrupt their councils and festivities. Tell you what, though . . . I'll drop around and investigate after the end of ceremonies. That'll be in four days. That's what I told Jud Miller."

Laird Rance rose.

"Okay," he said. "But just remember that any trouble that may occur will be your responsibility. If you act now, you could call in troops from Fort Sedger."

"Kinda expensive calling five hundred men in from two hundred miles away, just on suspicion."

"Even more expensive if the suspicion turns out to be correct."

"I'll chance it," the sheriff said. "I'm pretty sure there's some good explanation behind all this."

Four days passed. Every night, both Jud Miller and Laird Rance put up their shutters and alerted the bunkhouse crews to any possible attack. On the morning of the fourth day, Rance saw Sheriff Salter ride by on his way to the Miute reservation.

It was toward five o'clock in the evening that he saw Salter ride by again. This time, the sheriff reined in at the door. There was an odd look on his face as he finished tying up the reins, and turned to the ranch owner.

"Well, did you find out?" Rance asked nervously.

There was a moment of silence. Then the effort of holding it in proved too much. Mark Salter burst out laughing. He whooped with merriment.

"Hold on," Rance said sternly. "I asked you a fair question, didn't I?"

Gradually, the intensity of the Sheriff's merriment abated, though it didn't stop.

" 'Resentment at some real or fancied insult'," he quoted. "Ha-ha! 'Secret Society' Ho-ho!"

"Well, what did you find out?" Rance asked, indignantly.

The sheriff finally brought his chuckles under control.

"I did just what I said I would," he said. "I asked them and they told me." He glanced wryly at the ranch owner. "Laird," he said. "I kinda figured it was kid stuff, and it was. You'd have found out a good deal more by asking your kids what was going on . . . and so would Jud Miller. Why, your kids and Jud's, and those Injun kids from the reservation were just playin' Cowboys and Injuns . . . only the Injun kids were usin' some of the Miute tribe's old weapons they'd gotten out of storage. I got the tribal chief to promise he'd take away that old, obsolete stuff and hide it for good and all. Wouldn't surprise me if every kid on that Injun reservation was due for a good spanking tonight, Laird!"

Laird Rance smiled wryly and glanced toward the woodshed.

"Well, I reckon what's good enough for Injun kids is good enough for mine and Jud Miller's . . . tell him I said so!"

Albert Dorne – probably the greatest money-maker in the history of commercial art. At the height of his career, he began a full-time search for people who like to draw.

He's Looking for People Who Like to Draw

TODAY HUNDREDS of men and women who never thought they could be artists are working happily at easels and drawing boards, making pictures, and getting well paid for it. They all can thank Albert Dorne, a famous artist who devotes almost his full time to helping other people become artists.

Some of the people Dorne has helped

Herb Smith was a payroll clerk. Soon after he started studying with us, he landed an art job with a large printing firm. This was four years ago; today he's head artist for the same firm.

John Busketta is another. He was a pipefitter's helper in a big gas company. Today he still works for the same company, but as an artist in the advertising department, with a big increase in pay.

Harriet Kuzniewski was bored with an "ordinary" job before she heard of Albert Dorne. Today she does high-style fashion illustration in New York.

With the right training, Wanda Pickulski gave up her typing job to become fashion artist for a local department store.

John Whitaker of Memphis was an airline clerk two years ago. Recently he won a national cartooning contest and was signed to do a newspaper comic strip.

Long before Albert Dorne started looking for people who like to draw, they came to him for advice and help. Since he alone could only help a few of these people he called together America's most successful artists —men like Norman Rockwell, Jon Whitcomb. Stevan Dohanos and Al Parker.

A Plan to Help Others

He said: "All over America, there are people who like to draw, who could be turned into good artists. Why can't we give these people the training they need—including all the trade secrets and know-how we've learned over the years? I'm suggesting a new kind of school—a home-study art school that would give talented people the best professional art training, no matter where they live."

The famous artists agreed. Taking time from their busy careers, they spent several years creating a remarkable series of art lessons covering every aspect of drawing and painting. They illustrated their lessons with over 5,000 "here's-how" illustrations. The lessons start from scratch and cover every skill a top artist needs. Finally, the famous artists developed a wonderful way to give each student personal correction and advice all through his training.

Albert Dorne is not surprised by the success of his students. "The art field is growing. We keep getting calls from all over the country, asking us for practical, well-trained students who can step into full-time or part-time art jobs."

Famous Artists Talent Test

To find others with art talent worth developing, the famous artists created a 12-page talent test. Thousands paid $1 for this test, but now the School offers it free and will grade it free. If you show talent on the test, you will be eligible for training by the School. No obligation. Simply mail coupon. It might be your first step to an exciting, well-paid career in art.
